Specifically, adding language that helped clarify the directions for the project, the projects began to produce fewer mistakes and irrelevant comments that many students made previously within the body of the project. To recall, most of the mistakes were made on the Evaluation side of the project and not so much with the Recording side of the project. While that is still the case, the Evaluation part of the project is where there is more work to do with respect to critical thinking, so I suspect that trend will continue. My suspicion on that has proven to be correct. A few students still do the Recording side of the project and do not even attempt to do the Evaluation, and there is still that small % of the students who simply do not do the project at all. After having done this project for a while now, it is clear to me that will always be the case. I have considered making the project worth more points to see if that would result in more students completing the project, but I have not yet made that change. Lastly, there always seems to be one section that really does poorly on this project, and in this Fall 2021 term, it was section 40. In this section, there were 7 students who simply did not do the assignment (out of 27). That is 26% of the class. By contrast, in section 41, only 4 of 32 students did not do the assignment. In the late-start section, only 2 of 16 did not do the assignment. Why certain sections seem to have a different project completion rate is a complete mystery to me; they all got the very same directions from me on how to do this project. The project is not one I'm willing to give up; too many students comment on how much they gain by doing the project. This semester, I plan to increase communication with students on this to attempt to decrease the number of students who do not complete the project.	2022-01-12
